New Career Ideas for Everyone – Time to embark on a new professional journey

1. HR worker (generalist, assistant, manager)

Many people are tired from working with computers, or standing at the assembly line for hours on end. If you belong to this group of people, you may find the role of an HR professional interesting and intriguing.

No special education or experience is required for many HR roles. You just work a bit on your people skills, communication skills, and show willingness to learn (and perhaps you already have these skills, and do not need to improve on them).

2. Marketing manager, or marketing trainee

Many jobs are routine, and you may be tired of one such (or perhaps of a succession of routine, repetitive jobs that present no challenges and excitement). Give a try to marketing.

Working on various campaigns, seeing interesting designs, being creative in your job, and learning new fascinating subjects such as color psychology, consumers behavior, or website analytics, can bring a new spark of life to your boring daily routine.

3. Manual labor

We sit in the office, in front of a computer screen. Then we come back home, and sit in front of the TV. In between the two, we sit in a car (or in a metro, tram, bus).

Sit, sit, sit, no wonder that we are obese, and often tired of our sedentary jobs. Why not to try manual labor? A bit of fresh air, and a different kind of people. People who enjoy being outside, people who are not afraid to put their hands to the test.

5. Freelancing career

Sometimes it is not a job title, but the type of our occupation that stands between us and the feeling of happiness. The number of freelancers is growing each year, and with websites such as freelancer.com or fiverr.com, it was never easier to become one such, and to find your first clients.

Join one of the freelancing sites, and start approaching people who post there projects on the website. The beginning is not easy, but once you establish yourself, the clients will keep coming.
