

InterviewPenguin.com

Your Best Job Interview Coach Since 2011

Sample answers to “What are your strengths?” interview question

- My biggest strength is probably my passion for work, and my motivation to learn and grow professionally. Everything is new for me right now, I feel excited, ready to learn and do my best. If we talk about my character, I'd point out a strong sense for responsibility and an ability to teamwork. I hope I can utilize my strengths in your company, on a position of a marketing trainee.
- I consider my communication skills, and understanding for other people, my greatest strengths. I read a lot of books on human psychology and on customer behavior, trying to learn how to connect with all kinds of prospects, and how to turn them to customers. My friends would say that I am intelligent and a good companion for any conversation, but I prefer to let other people to consider this. One way or another, I know that there is still a room to improve, and I continue studying and practicing, trying to become even a better saleswoman.
- I can work independently, I am physically strong, and I do not mind working outside for a long time. I also believe that I understand what you try to achieve on this farm, how you try to promote sustainable agriculture, which resonates with my personal values. Nevertheless, I know I have a lot of things to learn, I am motivated, and I see my future in agriculture.
- My experience is my greatest strength. I have been working as a teacher for the past thirty years, teaching at four different schools, two different school districts. I worked with all kinds of students and education administrators, and I believe that I have gained a great understanding for the ins and outs of a daily life at school. I would also say that I am responsible, easy to talk to and cooperate with, and open minded. I hope to get a chance to prove my strengths and skills, working at this elementary school.
- I can work independently, and I can complete a project from scratch – something I've learned in my freelancing experience. I can also look at the work from the point of view of my clients, trying to understand what they want to achieve with their work, and keeping these goals on my mind while developing the software. I always try to develop for the final user. Judging by references my customers left on my profile at Freelancer, excellent communication and delivering work on time are my other strengths. I hope to keep them in the next stage of my career.
- Communication skills are definitely my greatest strength. I can speak four languages, and I have also a good understanding for the people I talk to, I can read their emotions and sometimes even their wishes, from the way they talk, look, and gesticulate. I also believe to be responsible, loyal, and friendly. Of course we should never be satisfied with ourselves, and we learn all life long. I try to reflect on my work regularly, looking for areas of improvement.

Source and more answers: <https://interviewpenguin.com/what-are-your-strengths-interview-questions/>