

InterviewPenguin.com

Your Best Job Interview Coach Since 2011

How to get a job at Zoo – Exclusive Summary

1. Check the places where they typically advertise such jobs.

Most ZOOs in the world are governed by the cities where they are located. And the cities would not advertise jobs on commercial job boards, such as Monster or Top Jobs.

They will post them on their own website, in local newspapers, or on a bulletin board next to the town hall. A job offer may be advertised also on the bulletin board in the zoo, in the entrance area. Be sure to check all these areas regularly.

2. Befriend someone in the ZOO

The easiest way to get a job in the ZOO is personal recommendation. Go to the ZOO, spend time looking around, and talk to people who hang around and feed the animals.

Try to make connection and once this connection has been made (not in the first meeting), tell them about your desire to work with the animals. Once something become available, they will let you know.

3. Apply for internship through University

Veterinary faculties or faculties where you can study Biology or Zoology often cooperate with the ZOO. They would send a few students each year for internship (sometimes paid other times not).

It is not the same like having a real job, but it allows you to understand the place, to make some connections, and, when the right time comes, to apply for a full time job—maybe even at the end of your internship term.

4. Go in and ask

The most direct way is simply walking in the administrate building, knocking on the door of the zoo director, and offering your labor. And perhaps also something more.

If you make a good impression, if your body language is right, if you come up with some great interview answers, you may as well succeed...

Full article and more information: <https://interviewpenguin.com/how-to-get-a-job-at-zoo/>